

The News ©
November 5th, 9am
by Nia Cason

Didier Raoult will have to explain himself. The infectious disease specialist who spoke during the health crisis is summoned today before the Regional Council of the Order of Physicians of New Aquitaine. The procedure against him was initiated more than a year ago. He is accused of not having respected ethics, in particular for having questioned the effectiveness of wearing a mask and for having promoted hydroxychloroquine.

The final parliamentary steps for the 'health vigilance' bill. This text, which provides for the use of the health pass to be extended until July 31st, was immediately rejected by the senators yesterday. They demanded a less extended version, until the end of February.

30 rescue operations, with 1000 people rescued in 48 hours. This is the situation at the moment in the Pas de Calais according to the maritime prefecture of the Channel and the North Sea. This is part of the increasing number of migrants who try to reach the British coasts. In related news, a group of migrants was struck by a train last night between Calais and Dunkirk. They were traveling on the tracks. One person has died and three are injured.

Discussions on post-Brexit fishing licenses will continue "early next week" between France and the United Kingdom. The announcement was made by the British government after a meeting between the secretaries of British and French states. The sanctions promised by France are no longer relevant, at least for the moment.

The United States announced yesterday that they would offer 10 million dollars for any information allowing them to find the members of DarkSide. This group of hackers is known to develop ransomware. In Washington, this Russian-based group is behind the attack that targeted a large pipeline network on American soil last May.

And finally, ABBA will be in record stores today. The legendary group of the 70s have released a new album after 40 years of silence: 10 songs entitled 'voyage'.