The examination of the pension reform continues with a first setback for the government: The National Assembly rejected article 2 on the index of seniors. The measure was intended to fight unemployment among the elderly employees. At the same time, the inter-union sent a letter to all MPs, except those of the Rassemblement National, asking them to reject the bill and more specifically article 7 on the postponement of the retirement age to 64.

The fight against the reform therefore continues in the Assembly, but also in the streets. A new day of mobilization tomorrow with a major inter-professional strike. This time, there should be less disruptions, especially in transportation. At the SNCF, traffic on the TGV and OuiGo network will be only slightly affected, with 4 out of 5 trains running. At the RATP, metro traffic will be almost normal. The unions are betting on greater mobilization on March 7th.
