Are we going to run out of fuel? The question arises as the fight continues in refineries and fuel depots against the pension reform. Drivers are worried. Some gas stations are already experiencing difficulties.

At the site of Fos sur-Mer site, the Ministry of Energy Transition announced the requisition of three employees per shift. Meanwhile, the prefecture of Bouches-du-Rhône indicates that it is working on requisitions of gas stations especially for priority professions.

As for Emmanuel Macron, he will speak tomorrow on the 1 p.m. news of TF1 and France 2. This will be his first intervention since the final adoption of the pension reform.

In the rest of the news, French journalist Olivier Dubois arrived in France today. He was released yesterday after almost 2 years of detention in the Sahel. He had been kidnapped in Mali by a group close to al-Qaeda.

Will Donald Trump be arrested today? The former president of the United States is targeted in the context of the Stormy Daniels case. He is suspected of having paid to the porn actress to buy her silence.

And then today is the last day of the Printemps du cinema, which will end tonight throughout France. As a reminder, this means that all films at all screenings are available to watch for only 5 euros.
