A major operation is currently underway in the investigation into the disappearance of Lina in the Bas Rhin. According to the Saverne Public Prosecutor, the Strasbourg research section and a group of gendarmerie are mobilized at several locations.

A new settling of scores took place in Marseille, where 2 men were shot dead in the street, and another injured. This happened last night in the northern neighborhoods. An individual got out of a car and opened fire with a Kalashnikov.

In the rest of the news: They can quickly become an infernal nuisance: bed bugs are small insects, no larger than an apple seed, and they are proliferating throughout France. In the metros, cinemas and trains. So much so that the Paris town hall is demanding a plan from the government against these parasites which, once in your home, intend to stay.

Note that the Minister of Transport Clément Beaune asked the SNCF to provide an action plan in the coming days to eradicate these insects from trains.

And then it has never been so hot in September in France. The average temperature will rise to 21.5 degrees, or 3.5 degrees higher than seasonal norms according to Météo France. This weekend, temperatures will rise again. More than 30 degrees is expected in the South West.
