Emmanuel Macron is in Brussels. The Head of State and his European counterparts are trying to find a common response to the catastrophic humanitarian situation in Gaza. Dozens of hospitals have stopped functioning, due to lack of electricity and medicine. The population lacks water and food. The Europeans have launched a joint appeal for a break in the fighting so that humanitarian aid can arrive on site. France will, for its part, send 54 tons of emergency aid tomorrow.

The dissolution of the ecological collective Le Soulèvement de la Terre is again before the Council of State this Friday. Seized in August by a summary judgment, the body suspended the dissolution decree in view of a “serious doubt” about the reasons given by the executive to dissolve the movement. A support rally is planned.

100 euros and 2 tickets for the exam sessions. This is what the government is offering to students who would be forced to leave their CROUS accommodation during the Paris Olympic Games. This was announced by the Minister of Higher Education in the columns of Le Parisien. More than 2,000 students will have to be relocated because certain student residences will be requisitioned for firefighters, caregivers, and law enforcement.

Street harassment still has a bright future ahead of it. According to an internal security study, Sexist outrages increased by 22% in one year, between 2021 and 2022. Most offenses took place in big cities and in the vast majority of cases it is men who attack women.

In the United States, the manhunt continues in Maine. A man opened fire in a bowling alley and restaurant Wednesday evening, killing 18 people. Residents are called to remain confined in their homes until the shooter has been found. The killer is an army reservist and firearm instructor.
